

Dr. Joanna Neilson

Joanna Neilson is Assistant Professor of History and Chair of the Department of Humanities at Lincoln Memorial University. She earned her Ph.D. in British History at Florida State University with minor fields in the Middle East and India. At the University she has served on the University's General Education Committee and Faculty Senate. Prior to her current position, Neilson served as the History Program Director. For the past several summers, Neilson has been a grader for the ETS Advanced Placement Exam for World History. Her research interests include seventeenth-century English merchant companies and the pedagogy of World History. Her teaching interests include World History, British History, the Modern Middle East and North Africa, Modern India and South Asia, Imperialism, and Introduction to Historical Studies, the first of two skills classes in the History major.