

Dr. Steven Roberts is an award-winning instructor in the Social Science Department in the Hamilton School of Arts, Humanities, and Social Sciences; and the Master of Public Program at LMU. He holds a Ph. D. in Political Science, a Master of Public Administration, and a BA in English Literature, all from the University of Tennessee. His specialized areas of study are the Congress and the Presidency, Public Administration, State and Local Government, and Intergovernmental Relations. He has published his research in peer-reviewed journals, edited several scholarly publications, and presented a number of papers at professional conferences. Although he has been a college professor, both fulltime and as an adjunct, for many years, his primary career was in public service. He served in appointed positions for Governors Lamar Alexander and Ned McWherter, and Mayor and US Ambassador Victor Ashe. Additionally, he has held elected office as a member of the former Knoxville Board of Education. He is an avid baseball fan, writes short stories (four collections have been published), and spends as much time as possible with his children and grandchildren. He is currently researching the affect religion and geography have on postconviction relief. His courses include;
