

Mollie Carter, Assistant Professor of Psychology at LMU, teaches Social Psychology, Child and Adolescent development, and Educational Psychology among other courses.

Mollie holds a BS in Psychology from Union University, a MA in Christian Mental Health Counseling from Oral Roberts University, and a PhD in Educational Psychology and Research from the University of Memphis. She has co-authored four publications and presented at three national and international conferences on the topic of social networking site use and emerging adults. Her dissertation, entitled Spiritual Learning and College Self-Efficacy, served as a catalyst into her passion for research focusing on religiosity and spirituality in emerging adulthood.

Mollie is also licensed as a professional counselor with mental health service provider designation in Tennessee. She worked in community mental health for three and a half years, and she worked in private practice for three years. During her time in community mental health, Mollie proudly served as counselor and supervisor on a clinical trial funded by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration and the Tennessee Department of Mental Health and Substance Abuse Services providing individual and family counseling to adolescents and young adults with co-occurring disorders.

Mollie lives in Harrogate. She loves spending time with her family and friends, listening to classic rock music, going to concerts, reading, travelling, and serving in her church.
